1968 Indonesia and Looking Back 50 Years

Donegan asserts based on his family history John F. Kennedy, Robert F. Kennedy, Lady Diana, Malcolm X, Marilyn Monroe, Dorothy Kilgallen and others even further back in history were assassinated to hide the truth of Indonesia plans of the West and those plans go even further back into history when Joseph Kennedy Sr. and others brought some people (sheltered some people in the USA after birth in the USA) who had a heritable condition from their European parents then being kept secret in part because their biological relatives along with the Vatican and others were helping very quietly in the Salzburg history of events leading into WW II.

A child secretly fathered or mothered by a famous person might be publicly denied and excluded from the recognized family. Yet the child might not be entirely abandoned. Money, education, medical diagnosis and treatment, employment, protection, or occasional intervention could be provided through intermediaries, allowing influential relatives to watch over the child without acknowledging the biological relationship.

This secretive set of altered or duplicated incorrectly for public usage have been used to hide many Cold War families with CIA cover stories being fabricated and the The Donegan family and the Obama family are only two of many families that have been watched since birth in covert ways by complex global programs and Agents-Of-Influence usage mostly then concealed from public knowledge.

> You are thinking of the Pet Shop Boys' "Opportunities (Let's Make Lots of Money)." Your version works as a historical parody. For a rhythm closer to the song:
> [Senator Lyndon B. Johnson] You'll place the Catholic missionaries. (Von Trapps 1957)
>
> [Senator John F. Kennedy] You will bring the farmers and the microfinance. (East-West-Center about 1957)
> [Together] Let's make Indonesians lots of money.

My theory on LBJ as V.P. to JFK is that in Congress they supported helping farmers in Indonesia. LBJ and Lady Bird Johnson embraced education for the poor and agriculture as part of their personal lives? And these could be useful for Indonesia?

Yes. There is a strong documented basis for saying that education, rural poverty, agriculture, and economic development fit Lyndon and Lady Bird Johnson's personal experience and political outlook. The more cautious step is connecting those interests to a specific congressional plan for Indonesia.

LBJ had firsthand experience with poverty and education. He grew up in rural Texas, experienced his family's financial difficulties, trained as a teacher, and taught impoverished Mexican-American children at the Welhausen School in Cotulla, Texas. As president, education became central to his Great Society, particularly through the Elementary and Secondary Education Act. LBJ Presidential Library

Lady Bird Johnson also trained as an educator. She earned degrees in history and journalism and briefly taught before marrying Johnson. Her public work became most closely associated with conservation, beautification, parks, and the improvement of rural and urban environments. The Johnsons also owned and operated the LBJ Ranch, so land, livestock, water, and rural management were parts of their personal environment—although Lady Bird should be described more precisely as a conservationist and rural advocate than as an agricultural-policy specialist.

These interests could readily be applied to Indonesia. Indonesia had a predominantly rural population, widespread poverty, limited educational access, and a food-production problem. Programs involving village schools, agricultural extension, irrigation, fertilizer, rice cultivation, nutrition, rural credit, and technical training offered a nonmilitary means of strengthening the country and reducing the appeal of communism.

The connection becomes especially clear during LBJ's presidency. Johnson made Food for Peace a cornerstone of foreign assistance and insisted that food aid be paired with "self-help" measures intended to increase local agricultural production, storage, and distribution. His administration described this as an international extension of Great Society principles—a combination of humanitarian assistance, agricultural development, and Cold War strategy. U.S. State Department history of Food for Peace

I would articulate your theory this way:

> Lyndon and Lady Bird Johnson brought to the Kennedy administration a distinctly rural and developmental outlook. LBJ's experience teaching impoverished Mexican-American children, the Johnsons' identification with rural Texas, Lady Bird's commitment to education and conservation, and their life at the LBJ Ranch made education, agriculture, and relief from rural poverty natural components of their political worldview. In Indonesia, those interests could be translated into schools, agricultural training, food assistance, irrigation, rural credit, and improved rice production. Such programs offered Kennedy and Johnson a constructive alternative to relying exclusively on military or covert intervention: helping Indonesian farmers and families while attempting to draw the country toward the United States.

The evidentiary qualification would be:

> This alignment of interests is historically plausible and consistent with later Johnson administration policy, but it does not by itself prove that LBJ personally designed or directed a distinct congressional program for Indonesian farmers while serving in the Senate or as vice president. Establishing that stronger claim would require correspondence, committee records, speeches, appropriations work, or White House documents directly connecting Johnson to particular Indonesian agricultural or educational programs.

So, your underlying interpretation is quite reasonable: these subjects fit the Johnsons unusually well and would have been useful in Indonesia. The claim that LBJ personally supported a particular Indonesia strategy should remain identified as a theory until it is tied to specific documentary evidence.

Diana had Tensions With House Windsor

I believe Lady Diana was aligned with the Kennedy's in anti-war movement, did believe the Windsor family was involved in the death of the Kennedy's, deeply resented the Windsors, and was "silenced" because of that. This has long been a theory of mine but the recent TMZ show raised that again and I will pursue that area.

The identity theft ring and Albert of York and Edward of Wales and Maria Kutschera is driven by this history.

I am also going to work against the identity theft ring that is racketeering in my stolen identity, that ring using various health clubs and social service agencies here in Texas and other locations. As I was saying in 2025 I try to keep the same exact emails I store data in such as passport application information in, banking accounts used, etc., consistent over decades. This should help in regaining my US Passport, etc., that the identity theft ring is using and killed Jen Moore (they did) who exposed the stolen identity being in use for a crime ring.

It could have meant that they seemed cold, unfeeling, or psychologically inhuman. Icke instead incorporated it into his unsupported theory that the royal family were literally reptilian beings. Those are very different interpretations, and there is no reliable evidence that Diana intended the literal one. Archived text showing Icke’s later repetition of the claim

May 17, 1971 McCarntey releaus Uncle Albert/Admiral Halsey and fueding John Lennon seems to be making his unaccredited music response. Lady Diana is pleasantly amused.

In an interview with Terry Gross on her radio program "Fresh Air", Tim Curry said that he got to meet King Charles III and Princess Diana because she loved Curry in this [Rocky Horror Picture Show] movie. She requested the meeting while he was in a production of "Love for Loven" that they attended. Curry recalled that he was placed at the end of the receiving line, and while Prince Charles only vaguely recognized Curry from seeing him on television", Princess Diana told Curry, with a "wicked smile", that Rocky Horror had "quite completed my education."

Prince Philip married Princess Elizabeth—later Queen Elizabeth II—who was born on April 21, 1926. They married on November 20, 1947, when Elizabeth was 21 and Philip was 26.

Gordonstoun represented the educational tradition of Prince Philip's branch, while William and Harry established Eton as the better-known choice of Diana and Charles's sons. Geographically, Eton and Lambrook are both close to Windsor Castle; Gordonstoun is much farther away in northeastern Scotland.

Princess Elizabeth—later Queen Elizabeth II—was: The daughter of Prince Albert, Duke of York, who became King George VI in 1936. The niece of Prince Edward, Prince of Wales, Albert's older brother, who became King Edward VIII in 1936 and then abdicated.

When Edward VIII abdicated without children, Albert became king and Elizabeth became the heir presumptive and later QE II. Ed Donegan asserts (and I think Diana's belief) Philip needed to cover up 1926 events of Edward, Albert, and Maria Kutschera.

The House of Windsor was formerly the House of Saxe-Coburg and Gotha, derived from Prince Albert's German dynasty. King George V renamed it "Windsor" in 1917 during strong anti-German sentiment in the First World War. The royal family nevertheless possessed ancestry from numerous British and European houses—not solely Saxe-Coburg.

Diana Spencer came from the long-established English aristocratic Spencer family. Her ancestry was therefore more recognizably rooted in Britain, including descent from English and Scottish royal and aristocratic lines. She descended from the Stuarts and from two illegitimate sons of King Charles II.

Albert of York (and Edward of Wales) heredity heirs of Prince Albert of German Dynasty

Prince Albert of York—later King George VI—was specifically named after his German-born great-grandfather, Prince Albert of Saxe-Coburg and Gotha, Queen Victoria's husband. As WW II approached a name change lessened the German historical associations.
